It was the pleasure of the University of Oregon to host the 2006 (37th) Annual Conference on African Linguistics, simultaneously with the increased growth of African Studies on this campus. As this volume of Selected Proceedings of the 37th Annual Conference on African Linguistics goes to press, a minor in African Studies has just been approved by the State Board of Education, drawing on Africanist faculty from a wide variety of disciplines and departments. The University of Oregon has recently increased efforts to make our African language offerings more robust in terms of number of languages offered, and number of years of academic course work available. And we have active study-abroad programs and internships for students in various parts of the African continent.

It is of interest to note that about 40% of Africa's approximately 2,500 languages belong to the Afro-Asiatic, Nilo-Saharan, and Khoisan phyla, while about 60% belong to the Niger-Congo phylum.<sup>1</sup> However, the disproportionate majority of the more than 80 papers presented at the 2006 conference were on Niger-Congo languages (and proportions for the 2007 conference cannot be much different). We note that this apparent research imbalance is equally reflected in this volume: only three papers on non-Niger-Congo languages. Nevertheless, the papers included here, which have been subjected to substantive peer-review, are significant for increasing the database of detailed studies of individual African languages. Several of the papers deal with contact among multiple languages and consequent areal effects, as well as language endangerment under contact. Additionally, all of the papers in the first section of the volume plus three of the morphosyntax papers are important for improving our understanding of historical dynamics in the languages and language families of the African continent.

The conference and this volume would not have been possible without generous support from many entities. Financial support was provided by the Linguistics Department, the Yamada Language Center, the Center for Applied Second Language Research, and the College of Arts and Sciences. Generous—and invaluable—intellectual, personal, logistical, and moral support was provided by members of the University of Oregon community including Colleen Ahland, Michael Ahland, John Bush, Dorothy Attneave, Linda Campbell, Carl Falsgraf, Susan Guion, Norman Kerr, Gwen Lowes, Jeff Magoto, Taeva Shefler, Irina Shport and other students and faculty in Linguistics; members of the African Studies Committee including Dennis Galvan and Stephen Wooten; members of the ACAL steering committee particularly including Akin Akinlabi, Lee Bickmore, and Laura Downing; and Mike Cahill of SIL International. Grateful thanks are extended to Larry Hyman for his enthusiasm to see the conference succeed, brainstorming assistance, general goodwill, and his seemingly tireless efforts to advance not just the scientific study of African languages, but of language generally. We are grateful for the generous participation of all our invited speakers: Larry Hyman, Derek Nurse, Antonia Schleicher, and Anne Storch. Though not specifically named, we are grateful to all the reviewers (both of abstracts and full papers) for their careful and essential work. Finally, but most importantly, we appreciate all the conference participants, who made this a profitable occasion of intellectual exchange.
